

Bettina Dennerlein

Religion, the State, and the Body. Recent Debates on Family Law Reform in Egypt and Morocco

The paper analyzes how recourse to religion serves to define and control the body by linking it to a particular understanding of the family as a pre-social and a pre-legal realm. At the same time, it looks at how gender and family, while being naturalized, are at the same time constantly renegotiated.